

Congress Must Preserve Six-Day Mail Delivery

The United States Congress has a 30-year unblemished history of supporting six days of delivery and universal service. So have administrations from President Reagan to President Obama. But now there is an effort to change this longstanding bi-partisan policy in the Rules Committee.

- Millions of individuals and businesses who receive and send parcels and letters, or who conduct financial transactions on Saturday will be affected.
- Rural America, the elderly, underprivileged, handicapped, and many others depend on six-day delivery for prescription drugs and essential items.
- 172 House Democrats and Republicans have co-sponsored a bi-partisan resolution preserving six-day mail delivery. Representatives who have not signed on, are urged to consider H. Res. 137.

Protect six-day mail delivery—
it's good for business and good for America.
